Psalms 56:3 (NIV)

After 40 years of camping out in the wilderness, God's people arrived at the Jordan River. When Moses died, God chose Joshua to lead the Israelites.

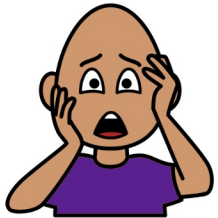

God told Joshua they were to cross the river and that He would give them every place they walked on.

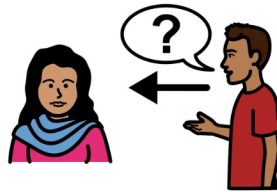

Israelite spies snuck across the river and entered Jericho. A woman named Rahab offered them a place to stay.

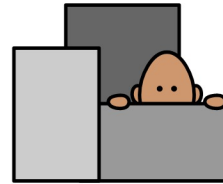

The people of Jericho already knew about the Israelites and how their God had lead them through the Red Sea and helped defeat their enemies.

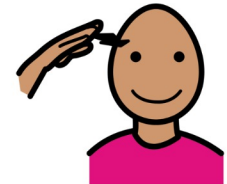

When word reached the King of Jericho that the Israelite spies were in the city, he panicked.

Rahab was questioned by the King's messengers about the spies staying with her. She lied to protect them and claimed the men were gone.

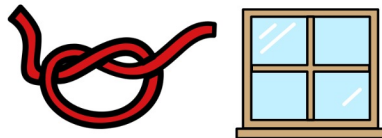

Rahab had actually hidden the spies in the roof and sent the King's men on a wild goose chase. After the King's men left, Rahab went to the roof to talk to

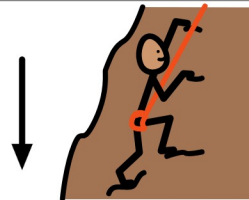

She knew God had given the Israelites that land and the stories of what God had done even though she was not an Israelite.

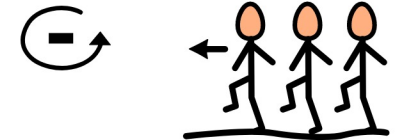

She asked the spies to be kind to her and her family and to not allow them to be killed when the time came to take the land.

The spies told her to tie a bright red rope in the window and bring her family into the house when the Israelites were to enter the land and stay there.

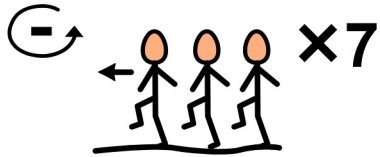

Rahab lowered the men with a rope and they were able to escape into the hills. After 3 days, the spies were able to make it back to the Jordan River.

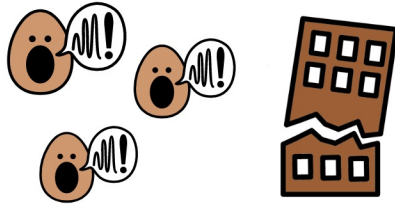

The Israelites crossed the Jordan River. God gave Joshua instructions for the army to march around the city for 7 days in a row.
